

ELECTORAL COLLEGE versus NATIONAL POPULAR VOTE

The Left: One Person, One Vote.

The Right: One Person, One Vote...that counts.

That is, the people in rural areas and smaller states actually have to have votes that count (and matter) as they would always lose the popular vote on any nationwide election or issue, and essentially be 2nd class citizens.

Electoral College was created to avoid the thousand years of war in Europe where smaller countries would be dominated, and sometimes invaded, by larger countries. Hence, these smaller countries would rebel and declare war on the larger countries.

Liberals wanting a National Popular Vote would be making, again, another short-sighted mistake by not listening to the other side, e.g., eliminating the 60-vote Senate rule for a short-term gain.

One Person, One Vote...that counts.
